Notice of intent to remain silent.

It is my intention to no longer speak to you without your consent to being recorded. I do not want to speak with any doctor, lawyer, politician, banker, or law enforcement personnel unless you sign a waiver of consent to be recorded during all conversations with me. Please do not take this personally. I am only doing this to protect my own rights and safety, as well as yours. If you are in the medical industry, I will gladly share whatever personal health data I have in order to help you help me.

I lost trust in doctors (and all humans) when my own orthopedic doctor misdiagnosed me in September 2016. It was my fault for convincing the physical therapy personnel to change the name that the doctor wrote on the prescription from “John Cooper” to “Glen Cooper”. It was my fault for being stupid enough to believe my doctor when he said he had good news for me and that I never broke my knee and could remove the brace at any time. I accept full responsibility for believing him and realize that I am now possibly permanently physically disabled as a result.

I refuse to entrust my life to any other human being again without proof that they have not made a mistake which will negatively impact my life and my ability to help provide a good life for my children. I expect the doctors to say heterotopic ossification (“H.O.”) around my left knee is common with a traumatic brain injury (“TBI”). I believe I would not be disabled had I not been misdiagnosed in September and I was not dain bramaged enough to believe what my orthopedic doctor told me. The pain I experienced when I took off the knee brace, as he said I could, was so severe that I am just very thankful to still be alive. If there was a gun present, I would have used it to put an end to the inhumane agony that I experienced. The misdiagnosis was a mistake on both of our parts. Never again with me unless there is proof as to what actually occurred and why things are the way they are.

Since the laws about recording vary in different states, I am choosing to follow the strictest of these laws which requires “two-party” consent. This document serves as notification that you have been advised that any verbal or electronic communications with Glen will be recorded. You have the right to remain silent. Anything you say can and will be used for training and quality purposes only.

To acknowledge that you have been notified of my intention to record all conversations, you must digitally sign a waiver of consent which can be obtained at https://waiver.glencooper.com/. Any recordings made will remain confidential unless I am ordered by a court of law to disclose them. You have my permission and recommendation that you record our conversations as well so that there will be no possibility of any recordings having been tampered with by either party.

Thank you for your help.
